COMMISSIONER ADELSTEIN UNVEILS NEW DTV WEB SITE AT NAB SHOW TUESDAY

Las Vegas, Nevada – As part of the Federal Communications Commission’s comprehensive effort to ease the national transition to digital television, Commissioner Jonathan Adelstein will unveil the FCC’s newly enhanced and consumer-friendly digital transition web site, www.dtv.gov, at the FCC’s booth at the National Association of Broadcasters show in Las Vegas on Tuesday at 11 a.m. PDT. The redesigned site will provide consumers with access to local DTV transition support and reception information, along with answers to questions about DTV equipment they may need to buy and install. The collection of resources and statistics on the site will also be valuable for broadcasters, local government officials, businesses – in short, anyone affected by the transition. Commissioner Adelstein will also have copies of a new DTV transition consumer guide, which has been produced by Consumers Union in cooperation with the FCC.

Who: FCC Commissioner Jonathan Adelstein

What: Updates to www.dtv.gov

When: Tuesday, April 21, 11 am, Pacific Daylight Time

Where: FCC Exhibit, North Hall N8507, Las Vegas Convention Center
